MSc Thesis _____

- Research on Competition and Cooperation Strategies for Retailers in the Context of Omnichannel Retailing Concerning Returns Freight Insurance June 2021

► Background

The development of Internet technology and e-retailing; The emergence of the omnichannel retailing mode; The increasing numbers of consumer returns; The innovative returns freight insurance service, especially in China

► Theory

Consumer Utility Theory; Game theory; Optimization Theory

► Method

Mathematical Modeling and Analysis; Numerical Experiment

► Research Significance

Enrich the relevant research in the omnichannel retailing and customer returns fields; Provide theoretical grounds and decision-making references for retailers involved in the omnichannel retailing environment

PhD Project _____

- Research on the Right to Repair Regulation and It's Impacts From an Operations Management Perspective

► Background

In April 2024, European Parliament adopted the directive on the so-called “right to repair” for consumers. The rules clarify the obligations for manufacturers to repair goods and encourage consumers to extend a product’s lifecycle through repair. The directive complements other new EU rules on Ecodesign and on Empowering consumers for the green transition.

► Research Significance

This research aims at providing managerial insights and policy references by theoretical analysis on the behavior of the agents involved in the Right to Repair movement. The efficiency of the regulation is evaluated via the potential impacts from different agents on social welfare and environment.
